All over Cairo there are signs proclaiming Egypt as “Umm al-dunya” or Mother of the World, reflecting a pride in the central place ancient Egypt held long ago. Monuments built thousands of years before have stood the test of time, pollution and tourism. But this pride of ancient place has also played a crucial role in the development of modern Egypt. It took generations for Egyptians to gain control of the monumentalizing of the ancient past, or its study, or its artifacts. Other belief systems also overwhelmed the importance of the antiquities, like the spread of Christianity, Islam and Judaism. This course will explore the cultural history of early modern and modern Egypt, from the late eighteenth century to the present. We will explore the culture of Egypt under the Ottomans and the Mamluks, slavery in Egypt; the unsuccessful French attempt to colonize Egypt and the successful British occupation of the country. We will examine Egypt’s complicated relationship with Sudan, its closest neighbor to the south.

One cannot study modern Egypt without studying the history of Egyptian nationalism (and its often close relationship with feminism) and we will examine the development of nationalist movements in Egypt, from the end of the nineteenth century through Gamal `abd al-Nasr’s movement of pan-Arabism, to today. We will investigate Egypt’s wars with Israel, and its peace. We will do all of this with a variety of texts and media, with a special emphasis on novels and films. These can give us a glimpse into how poorly the country and its people have been represented, outside Egypt, and how Egyptian writers and film-makers look at their own society.
